“Strong governance” of Berkshire Music Hub leads to an outstanding review by Arts Council England

Arts Council England has praised the Berkshire Music Hub on another strong year of performance with a very positive annual feedback letter.

Strengths outlined include excellent school engagement, commitment to quality assurance, strong partnership working, rising pupil numbers from a range of backgrounds being identified as exceptionally talented, quality music learning opportunities and strong governance of the organisation.

Lynne Ellis, CEO of Berkshire Maestros, said:

“We are delighted with this feedback as it supports and recognises our hard work and commitment to our children and young people, our staff, schools, parents and partners.”

Music hubs were launched across the country in 2012, funded by Arts Council England, and Berkshire Maestros has been the lead organisation of the Berkshire Music Hub ever since. Hubs are dynamic partnerships made up of strategic local, regional and national music organisations and individual professional musicians and artists as well as schools and Unitary Authorities. The Berkshire Music Hub brings together many national and local music organisations and individuals, including Readipop, Reading Arts, Windsor Festival, Philip Brown Violins and Hogan Music.

In November 2016 the government announced that funding for music hubs would be continued until 2020, confirming that 121 hubs will share £300 million of funding.

“Now that Arts Council England has confirmed hub funding for the next four years, we look forward to further developing these areas as well as improving and expanding our provision to continue providing the best possible musical service and support to everyone we work with.”

Arts Council England’s full review stated:

- Excellent school engagement at 98% across both primary and secondary schools.
- Commitment to quality assurance through observation of hub partner activity with 94% of all observed sessions deemed good or better
